ARTWORK AT THE PARK: ROYAL LADY QUÝ BÀ

When talking about Vietnamese art, it is hard to deny the importance of lacquer. This art form, known in French as "laque poncée," embodies the dual techniques of lacquer application and meticulous polishing. The mystery of unknowing results always brings intriguing facades and a sense of uniqueness to the painting and artist.

Among the art collection of Park Hyatt Saigon shines a gem: The Royal Lady by Bui Huu Hung, one of today's foremost lacquer artists. A jewel in his 'Nostalgic Lacquer Art Collection,' this piece portrays a noblewoman poised beside an offering of burning incense, her form enveloped in traditional attire against a backdrop of mythical dragons, conjuring a sacred aura that echoes back to the feminine ideal during the Nguyen Dynasty era (1885 – 1889).

Critics and connoisseurs alike have lavished praise on "The Royal Lady", with Kimberly Sachsenmaier spotlighting Hung's profound integration of conceptual depth and homage to ancestry, achieved through his masterful deployment of palette and the revered Dong-Son method of lacquer application. Bui Huu Hung's creations serve not only as a bridge to the past but also as a canvas for his adventurous creative expression. Do you know where this painting is located?
